

ABSTRACT

[0027] A network text analysis called center resonance analysis (CRA) is presented which represents texts (or transcribed conversations) as networks of centering words. The networks of centering words are components of utterances or (specifically noun phrases) that authors and/or speakers deploy in a manner that makes their utterances coherent. A CRA network can be derived for any text, and abstractly represents its main concepts, their influence, and their interrelationships.

FOUO 1003362001